*Boxes north of river.

Fire alarms are sounded upon the tower bell at department headquarters by striking the number of the signal station nearest the fire, in this manner: If for box 4, four distinct strokes and repeated; if for box 13, one stroke, a short pause, then three strokes, and repeated, thus, I-III, I-III, etc. "22" is sounded for all fires within the district bounded by Fifth, Ninth, Jackson and Quincy streets.

Ten strokes, and repeated, followed by the number of the signal station nearest the fire, is the second alarm—for a serious fire.

Three strokes, followed by Twelve, and repeated, is the General alarm for a very dangerous fire, and calls out the entire department with a detail of police.

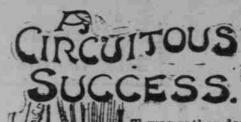

Two strokes, slowly, indicates fire sout, One long whistie from water works, for fires south of river. Three whisties from same, for fires north of river.

T was rather dark in the Ballway whenJulianJones went upstairs to his new quarters, fourth floor back. Someone else was on the stairs. He discerned a woman's form in the niche near the second floor and the glimmer-ing of a hand holding back skirts for him to pass. There was a faint breath of exquisite perfume about her.

"Excuse me," he said. Just then the gas flared out in the lower hall. He made out a soft, oval face and a lainty figure, as he passed. Julian was a big fellow, with features of strength rather than of beauty, but for all that he was a "sensitive," whose impressions of people were as sure as a dog's instinct about his master. The young woman's "atmosphere" was agreeable. It followed him to his room.

He lighted the gas and looked around. It was a goodish den for a literary worker. The carpet of pale greens and olives was almost new. The windows had lace curtains, and a fair outlook.

He sat down and tilted back his chair. A curious plot for a story had come into his mind. It seemed to start out of that chance encounter on the stairs, yet he scarcely realized it then, so subtle is the action of the

His heart began to beat quickly. He had done a good deal of patient work in the past, with indifferent success, but such impromtu mental activity was new. He took it as a good omen. He had a strain of what we call superstition, in his nature. A strange dream had impressed him with the belief that with his change of quarters, something was to happen-for the better.

The bright, unique ideas came pouring into his mind like a flood. They clamored for expression. He found a pencil in his pecket and looked around for paper. He had not a scrap. His trunks would not come till morning. If he stirred from the room to hunt up a stationer the aroma of the story would be sure to escape. He thought desperately of his cuffs, his shirt bosom, and execrated the motley wall paper. Had it been plain, it should Phone 82. have done duty as a tablet.

> He sprang from his chair. The covering of the quaint table in the corner was of white oilcloth—imitation "marble." He sat down and marked it off in spaces. The pencil glided over it smoothly. He wrote quickly and without effort. He knew he had never done anything like this before. Some one seemed to be dictating at his elbow. He had heard and read of such cases. Now he was the subject.

He wrote column after column, till the cloth was covered. He leaned back and surveyed it. He knew the thing was unique and exquisitely wrought out. It was a love story, with that dainty creature on the dim stairway flitting through it. Julian's eyes grew misty. He looked at his watch. The three hours he had been writing had seemed but five minutes.

It was early yet, not 11 o'clock. He locked the door and went out on the street. He had a vague idea of getting some paper from some hotel clerk. He could not feel easy until his story was in manuscript.

He turned into the avenue. The thunder of the elevated was in his ears. A team was dashing along recklessly underneath it. He attempted to cross. Round the corner was the - house. The subtle fascination of the story was yet upon him. In the midst of it he was conscious of a sudden shock, a pain crossing the sweetness, making horrible discord, then all became blank. He was pulled from under the feet of the horses. The blood flowed from a wound made by the cruel hoof. No address could be found on him and he was carried to a hospital. He had been severely but not fatally injured.

Brain fever set in, but an excellent constitution was in his favor. In his seasons of delirium the marble oilcloth haunted him. Sometimes it hung over him like an awning with the letters like a thousand eyes staring at him. Then they changed into Chinese hieroglyphics, and the young woman on the stairs was wrinkling her lovely brow in vain endeavors to decipher them. Again the cloth was waving like a banner from the roof of the Daily Fizzler.

Through careful nursing he came out of the tangle at length, and began to recall just what had happened His previous story which was to have inaugurated a new era, what had besome of it? Four weeks he had been lying there, they told him. In that time the room would be let to a new tenant, and his story scrubbed off the sloth by some wooden-headed chambermaid. He fretted and fumed over it. His omen of good luck had been demolished by a sledge hammer. "Don't you want to look over these papers?" queried the pretty cheerful nurse, placing a pile before him."

"You need to eatch up with the times."

Julian tossed them over half savagely and came presently upon something that made his heart thump. His story was looking him in the face from the columns of the Exaggerator. It was entitled "Into His Kingdom." The letters seemed to wink and blink at him knowingly.

He read it through. There had been scarcely any alteration. Somebody had got shead of the chambermaid and copied it, selling it as his or her own production. He should never be able to prove its authorship. He groaned in spirit.

Presently he came upon a copy of the Daily Fizzler, three weeks old. There he found the story headed by a sensational paragraph, which was evidently its first appearance, the other paper being a copy.

Julian was half amused, half annoyed over the conjectures about the author. The paragraph set forth the production found on the oilcloth as the last effort of an unfortunate son of genius. Driven to extremity, without a penny even to buy paper, he had fixed his last ideas upon the only white surface he could command, and then he had gone out into the night and committed suicide. One of those unidentified bodies at the morgue was his, probably. Could he have staved off despair twenty-four hours longer the ice would have been broken. Julian breathed freer. The copyist then, had not palmed off the production as his or her own. He could yet claim it without dispute. As soon as he was on his feet he called on the editor of the Daily Fizzler, who knew him by sight, and had prophesied success for him some day. "It seems I have been figuring in the Fizzler lately as an impecunious suicide," said Julian bluntly.

plain," he said.

Julian told the story. "Like another man, you awake to find yourself famous, said the editor offering his hand. "That story has been copied all over the country. It is a gem of its kind."

The editor laid down his pan. "Ex-

"I'm not sure I shall ever do so well again," said Julian. "What is once done can be done again. You will now command a hearing." "How did you get hold of it?"

"It was sent in by-by-" consulting a memorandum-"by Miss Cora Wheeler, 142 -- street." "Why, I wrote the story in that house!" "She sent a note stating the facts, and Bolton, you know him, touched them up a trifle. None of us suspected you. The landlady believed your stairs, third floor, front. The door was half open, showing a prettily furnished interior. He tapped gently. There was a rustling behind a dark green portiere and a young woman stepped out from behind it and greeted him with "Good morning." She was the one he had met on the stairs in the gloom, he could swear. There was the same faint perfume about her garments and, besides, he knew her atmosphere.

"You are Miss Cora Wheeler?" She bowed. "And I am Julian Jones. I wrote the story on the oilcloth. I am told it found its way into print through you. I have come to thank you."

Miss Wheeler was about as breathless as Julian. She motioned him to a chair and sat down. The facts that he had presented rapidly grouped themselves at once logically in her mind. "Then you did not suicide," she said with a mirthful glance at his muscular frame, adding, "I never thought you did." "I suppose I came pretty near 'shuf-fling off,'" he said, and repeated his story. "I expected something of that sort had happened," said Miss Wheeler, though there were all sorts of conjectures. The landlady called upon me to read what you had written. She thought it might denote, denote-"

"Insanity?" "It enchanted me. I write a little myself, you see. I sent it to the Fizzler. It was copied everywhere. You are a genius."

"With the right sort of inspiration," corrected Julian. It looks now as if the pair would go into partnership.
